About the Seminar

Business world today face increasing pressure to develop policies that are both good for the planet and businesses. With a comprehensive approach to environmental issues, organizations can identify business opportunities and education accordingly. Considering the success story of conducting International Seminar ITA 2009 “IT in Academics” in the year 2009, Sinhgad Institute of management is back again with “Green-IT and Open Source”. Today, there are billions of computers, hardware and other devices in use. Each of these on one hand is emitting CO₂ which is increasing greenhouse effect and on the other the leftovers of the computers and its consumables is creating its own huge dumps which actually is 90% non-degradable.

Thus, adding to global pollution. Taking these facts in mind the seminar aims to provide a platform where academicians, researchers, corporate sector and students can come together and discuss ways by which they can work towards to a IT pollution free planet. Also they can discuss and present various issuers of IT and Management. Another important aim of this seminar, which is being organized under University of Pune’s Quality Improvement Program, is to promote open source technology and free exchange of ideas. Distinguished Green-IT and Open-Source experts of national and international repute will be addressing the participants on the occasion.
