About the conference

Spiralling global environmental concerns such as global warming, climate change and depleting energy sources, green technologies have made reformulation of human-ecosystem a precondition to sustainable development. Green technology (also known as clean or environment friendly technology) consider using latest technological achievements to produce different systems, products or equipment that could help preserve natural environment. National Conference on Green Technologies for Sustainable Development (NCGTSD-2016) aims to bring together students, academicians, research scholars and industry professionals to present ideas, experiences and research knowledge on all aspects related to green technology. The conference programme consists of sessions of invited speakers, oral and poster presentation sessions.

Objectives of the conference

1. To provide a platform for postgraduate students, academicians researchers and industry professionals to present their research findings and latest discoveries in the field of green technology.
2. To provide opportunities for budding researchers to enhance their ideas and utilize (research findings) towards more innovative creations.
3. To form a network of researchers as well as forging engagement participants for future collaboration.

Who can attend?

Faculty, research scholars, post and under graduate students from Engineering Colleges and Science Colleges.
